Professors: foreign languages valuable in workplace

Jena Sauber
staff writer

For students who want to learn more of a foreign language than “burrito,” “hors doeuvre” or “karate,” the department of modern languages at K-State offers a wide variety of classes from beginner to advanced levels.

The classes are designed to help students learn a new language, prepare for trips abroad, advance in the career world, or simply acquire a new understanding of their culture and the cultures of other countries.

“It’s a wonderful opportunity to learn about yourself, how you think and where you live, and about the history, art and literature in other cultures,” said Melinda Cro, French language program coordinator.

“You can learn a great deal about how another culture perceives something by learning their language,” Cro said.

The department of modern languages offers classes in Arabic, Chinese, Czech, French, German, Hindi, Italian, Japanese, Latin, Russian and Spanish. The department offers minors in all offered languages except Arabic, Czech, Hindi and Latin. It also has bachelor’s and master’s programs in French, German and Spanish. Master’s degrees are also available in teaching English as a foreign language.

While each program teaches a different language, there are many similar benefits of learning a foreign language, said Mary Copple, Spanish language program coordinator.

“The linguistic value of just seeing how another language works allows you to better understand your own,” Copple said. “It allows you to communicate with an entirely new group of people.”

In addition, many of the classes include cultural information about countries where people speak the language. This foreign culture knowledge can be beneficial to students in a variety of ways, Copple said.

“Learning about the cultures of different people around the world is beneficial and can help you in re-examining your own culture and realizing how many of your daily behaviors are driven by established cultural norms,” Copple said.

While the department of modern languages offers more sessions of Spanish than other languages, all secondary languages have value in the workplace, depending on how a student chooses to use the secondary language, Copple said.

“It really depends on the field of a student’s future profession and where it might lead them,” she said. “We have students on campus who study Hindi, and that might not occur to you as a primary language you want to study, but if you are going to come into contact with those who do due to your professional goal, it’s very valuable to you.”

Cro agreed that learning a foreign language can help students when they venture into the professional world.

“Learning a foreign language is about learning about the culture and opening your mind to a new experience,” Cro said. “The more that we are open to other cultures and languages, the more we know, the easier our job becomes to create those bridges with someone else. That’s a quality and skills that are required in any type of job, no matter where you are.”

According to the 2009 American Community Survey conducted by the U.S. Census Bureau, approximately 228.7 million people over the age of 5 speak only English at home. Approximately 35.5 million people over the age of 5 speak Spanish or Spanish Creole at home, making it the second largest category.

In addition, learning a foreign language can make world travel easier, Cro said. This is especially true for Anne Sisley, sophomore in English and Spanish.

Sisley said she hopes to use her Spanish language knowledge to help her in her travels some day.

“I know I for sure would like to travel,” Sisley said. “So I will definitely use Spanish in that way, hopefully traveling to Spanish-speaking countries. I would really like to do some sort of translation or interpretation.”

Sisley said she became interested in learning Spanish during high school.

WEEKLY 10

10 items you should not wear to class

It takes approximately 30 seconds for someone to give you the once-over, a curt, flitting glance and make a judgment about the person you are.

Shallow? Unfair? Judgmental? Yes. But it's the cold truth: appearance matters.

College men and women have a record of repeat fashion offenses. Many of the styles should only be worn in the privacy of one's dorm room — if braved in the light of campus at all.

Jorts

Denim is a staple of the American wardrobe and is always on trend, yet it, too, can go wrong. "Jorts" is a pejorative term for men's jean shorts. A pair of knee-length — sometimes at their worst — cut-off shorts is Dad's unflattering counterpart to Mom's high-waisted, tapered-leg mom jeans. Jorts are sometimes paired with a cell phone case clipped to the waistband as an accessory, which has not been cool since beepers were.

Sleepwear

Nothing says effort like showing up to class in a pair of pajama pants still wrinkly from sleeping in them the night before. If you want to pay homage to a favorite cartoon character by wearing their mugs from head-to-toe, it is best to do so in the privacy of your home — when sleeping. Lacy, silky sleepwear also has no place in the classroom; enough said.

And, unless you're Snooki, slippers are inappropriate for public, possibly even unhygienic.

Utilitarian footwear

As much you might enjoy the freedom of wriggling your toes by wearing sandals whilst still having the power to climate control them with socks, the practicality is a fashion faux pas for the record books. Crocs, a plastic foam clog, are a blunder, too. Jibbitz, the decorative clip-ins for the shoe's swiss cheese-esque ventilation holes, compound the adverse effects of the shoe — unless, of course, the wearer is younger than 10 years old. Time magazine was on to something when it declared Crocs one of "The 50 Worst Inventions" in 2010.

Imprecise footwear

As with every spring, a legion of Ugg boot aficionados attempt to magically merge the seasons. From top to bottom, they dress for spring weather, but instead of pairing an ensemble with a sandal, they opt for the sheepskin-lined Ugg. Sweaty feet are not the fashion statement you want to make. Just the same, hobbling up the hill by Waters Hall can leave anyone breathless, but doing so in spike heels? Even worse. Keep the pumps for anywhere but treks across campus.

Bathing suits

Kansas is 780 miles from the nearest beach; bikinis and swim trunks should not be in your everyday wardrobe.

Fanny packs

"Look ma, no hands." Disguised today as hipster "waist" or "lumbar" packs by popular brands, any bag slung around the hips is just too reminiscent of its late-1980s ancestor.

Leggings as pants

Leggings as pants need not disappear, but they do need a style revamp, to the dismay of college men everywhere. Wearing body-hugging leggings as pants can produce unwelcome visible panty lines and leave nothing back there to mystery. Instead of wearing leggings with a T-shirt that hits at the hip, pair them with their predestined complements: a thigh-skimming tunic or a dress.

Extremely low-rise jeans

For ladies and gentlemen alike, low-rise jeans either display unmentionables that should remain, well, unmentionable, or worse, expose cleavage in the wrong places. Try giving jeans the sit test before buying.

Clubbing attire

If it is made of pleather, has sequins or glitter, or is transparent or cropped, reserve the garment for going out on the town; class is not the place to bring the party.

Unkempt look

Grunge fashion was popular in the 1990s, but the look was purposeful. Today, bed head and dirty, holey clothes put together in disheveled outfits are no longer considered "in," but unkempt. If not for yourself, look polished to show respect for professors and the learning environment. Dressing with even minimal effort makes the impression a student takes their education seriously.

Clothing has a bearing on state of mind. How we feel can mirror how we look. Taking pride in appearance can make an impact on others — if only in 30 seconds.

BEACH MUSEUM OF ART

Museum hosts TV show screenings before premiere

Norma Dunning
staff writer

What is art? Art includes many media, from paintings and sculptures to photography. In the TV series "Art in the Twenty-First Century," artists proficient in different techniques and from different parts of the world tell their story about how their artwork influences them and the world around them.

"Art in the Twenty-First Century" is in its sixth season and K-State art students had the opportunity to view a screening of an episode before the premiere on PBS on April 13.

"The Beach [Museum of Art] is a designated site for screening new Art21 releases," said Linda Duke, director of the museum. "We are delighted to share that opportunity with the department of art."

On April 3, during their usual class, the students of Art Career Seminar had the opportunity to view "Changes," one of the four segments in this season.

"Changes" features artists dealing with the world in flux — cultural, material and aesthetic transformation," said Kathrine Schlageck, senior curator at the museum.

This episode consisted of three artists — Ai Weiwei, El Anatsui and Catherine Opie.

El Anatsui talked about why change was important within his work and when each piece is put into a different exhibit, though it was the same materials, it changed.

For Ai Weiwei, Art21 was restricted to interviewing him only about his art because of issues with his release from prison. Ai explained that he became an artist because he had the choice to become a farmer, warrior or worker, or he could become an artist. Since his father was a poet, he became an artist.

Though Tuesday's screening only consisted of "Changes," another part, "Boundaries," will be shown on April 26.

"The theme of 'Boundaries' deals with freedom of expression," Schlageck said.

This part of the season has a K-State connection, as one of "The Beach [Museum of Art] is a designated site for screening new Art21 releases. We are delighted to share that opportunity with the department of art."

Linda Duke
director, Beach Museum of Art

the feature artists was a visiting artist.

"We are especially pleased that one of the artists featured in the April 26 screening is represented in our collection," Schlageck said. "Lynda Benglis was a visiting artist at K-State in the 1970s. The work she produced, called 'Phantom,' has recently been loaned to museums across the country, including New York City and Los Angeles, as part of a large show of her work."

"Art in the Twenty-First Century" gives artists a chance to explain why they do what they do to a larger audience.

"I go over that same little shadow over and over again until I get that shape. It has a character. It has some kind of little curly Q there where that rock sticks out and you've got to get that curly Q and you aren't satisfied until you get it," said artist Rackstraw Downes in the preview for "Art in the Twenty-First Century" season six.

For those who attend the screening, there are other reasons to have such a program.

"I think they are an enjoyable way for students, faculty members, the wider community, to access the ideas and values of contemporary artists," Duke said.

Icelandic family finds life in Manhattan 'different'

Anton Trafimovich
staff writer

Arora Gustafsdottir is a very sArora Gustafsdottir is a very special international student. She is 45. She was working as a crisis manager in Iceland until 2011. In late August, she ended up in Kansas. Now she studies art history at K-State, while her husband Spessi Hallbjornsson, 56, works on his documentary about American motorcycle culture and their daughter Saga, 9, goes to Lee Elementary School.

Neither Gustafsdottir nor her husband planned to come to Manhattan, but it was a variety of circumstances and Spessi's dream to make a documentary in the United States that drove them to the U.S.

"I needed to stay here to work on my motorcycle documentary," Hallbjornsson said.

Eventually, they found the solution that worked for everyone. Gustafsdottir, tired of her stressful job in crisis management, quit and entered an art program at the University of Iceland. Then she applied for an exchange program in the U.S.

Gustafsdottir decided to get a degree in the arts, as she has been fascinated with it for a long time. Once she completes her degree, she is going to combine her art education and business experience and run an art-residency, which is the organizing of temporary accommodation for artists who are seeking inspirational places to stay and work.

"I'm open to suggestions. I'll just go where it takes me," Gustafsdottir said. "I'm not worried about the future."

Although both Gustafsdottir and Hallbjornsson had visited the U.S. several times before they came to Manhattan last fall, the "Kansas experience" was totally new for them. On one hand, after cold Iceland, where the average summer temperature is lower than 60 degrees Fahrenheit, they enjoyed Kansas' mild climate. On the other hand, it was hard to get used to the city layout, which is very different from a traditional Icelandic one.

"In the place we lived in Reykjavik, I could walk to at least three groceries and a bookstore. But here it is different. You live in one place, but to shop and eat out you have to go to other places," Gustafsdottir said.

Hallbjornsson is very concerned about the viability of small businesses in Manhattan. To his mind, putting the city shopping center in the end of Poyntz Avenue undermines all small businesses in the town.

"The mall just takes everything and destroys the street," Hallbjornsson said.

The couple also dislikes that a significant part of the town is settled by temporary residents. That's why so many houses do not look homey.

"There are two permanent residents in our street," Gustafsdottir said. "An old lady on one side and an old lady on the other side. All others are students. They just come and go."

Gustafsdottir, however, has found some benefits of living in a college town and discovered several coffee shops with bold coffee.

As for food, the family doesn't cook traditional Icelandic food at home. The couple said Icelandic cuisine is usually greasy and consists mostly of various meat entrails, but because the entire family is vegetarian, they cannot eat it.

Gustafsdottir and Hallbjornsson said that Iceland is very Americanized. Like American society, Icelandic society tends to be consumer-driven. It is also common to have two to three cars in a family. Hummers and Land Rovers are as popular there as in America. The only difference, Gustafsdottir said, is that Icelandic drivers use cars mostly to hide from nasty weather. When it rains, for example, strong winds do not allow the rain to fall straight down, but sideways.

"Icelanders use cars as a coat," Gustafsdottir said.

As parents of 9-year-old Saga (three more older children live in Iceland on their own), Gustafsdottir and Hallbjornsson learned about American parent-child relationships. First, they found schools here are stricter and the individual discipline requirement is higher than in Iceland. Meanwhile, children in Iceland are more independent and have more freedom. For instance, Saga always goes to and from school by herself, while in the United States parents tend to take their children to school by car.

What American kids of Saga's age can't do is to arrange meetings with friends.

"Here you need to arrange it with parents. Then you need to take her by car," Hallbjornsson said.

In the end of May, when Saga finishes school, all the family will go back to Iceland. Hallbjornsson is expected to continue work on his documentary and Gustafsdottir will finish her degree in the fall. But what is next, no one knows yet. The family reiterated that it is important not to stay in the box and be ready to go where life takes them.

"Take the step in the unknown to see what happens," Hallbjornsson said.

Tornadoes overwhelm northern Texas: destruction ‘was very surreal’

Daniel C. Houston
The Lariat, Baylor U via UWIRE

Tornadoes and violent storms raked through the Dallas area Tuesday, crumbling the wing of a nursing home, peeling roofs from dozens of homes and spiraling big-rig trailers into the air like foot-balls. More than a dozen injuries were reported.

Overturned cars left streets unnavigable and flattened trucks clogged highway shoulders. Preliminary estimates were that six to 12 tornadoes had touched down in northern Texas, senior National Weather Service meteorologist Eric Martello said.

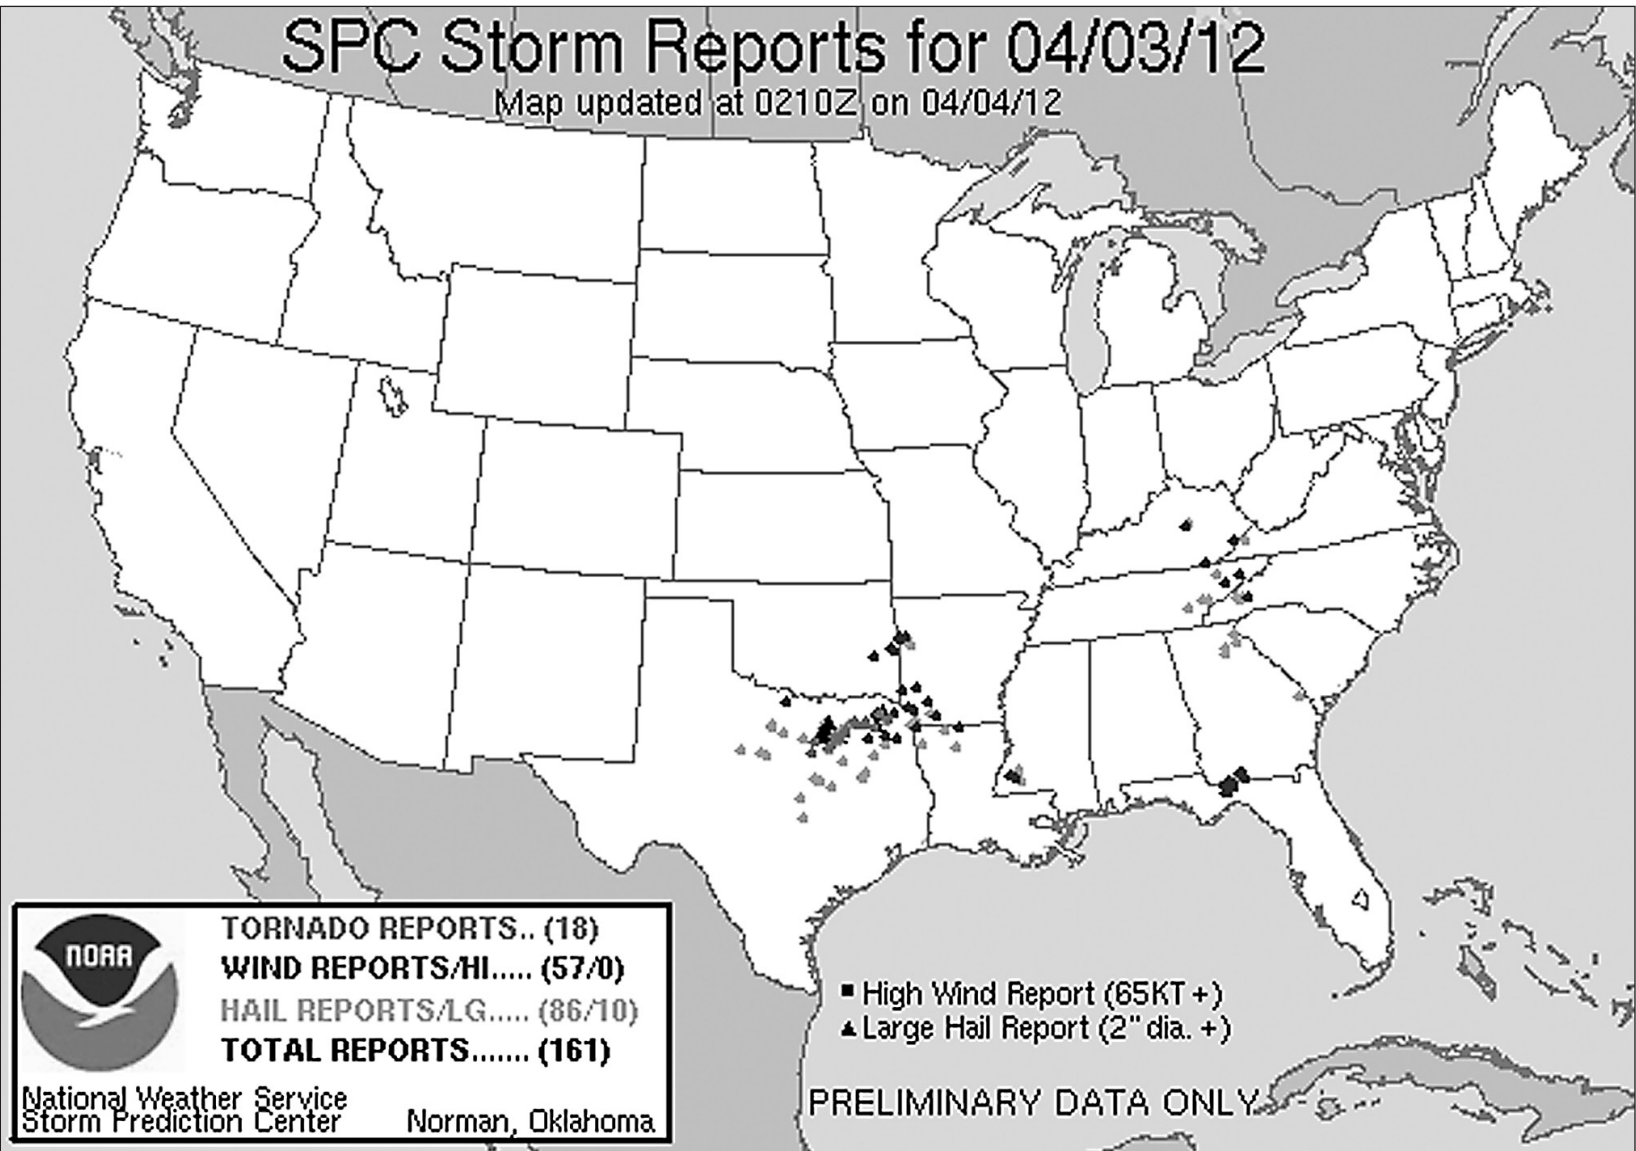

In suburban Dallas, Lancaster Police officer Paul Beck said 10 people were injured, two of them severely. Three people were injured in Arlington, including two residents of a nursing home who were taken to a hospital with minor injuries after swirling winds clipped the building, city assistant fire chief Jim Self said.

Arlington resident Ashley Sewell, 2006 Baylor graduate and self-described weather enthusiast, told the Lariat the storms caused significant property damage in her neighborhood, including an office building in which she used to work.

“It was very surreal,” Sewell said, “but what was even more strange is that this is my neighborhood, this is where I live, and just to see people I know coming out and surveying the damage [to their homes] is very strange.”

Sewell heard about the storms around noon Tuesday and took shelter in her Arlington home. After the storm passed around 4 p.m., she went outside to see for herself the impact the storm had on the area. She was greeted by broken windows, flipped Dumpsters and cars without windshields.

“Essentially the most shocking thing was the huge trees that had been torn apart,” Sewell said. “Some of them [were] uprooted, some of them snapped in half, and they were strewn across the street.”

The storm pushed cars into fences and toppled trees. Branches and limbs scattered across lawns and residential streets, and in one driveway, a tow-behind RV was left torn apart and crumpled.

“Obviously we’re going to have a lot of assessments to make when this is done,” Dallas County spokeswoman Maria Arita said.

Istiaque Ahmed, sophomore at the University of Texas at Arlington and personal friend of Baylor sophomore Rachel Miller, said he saw large motor homes flying through the air as he was driving in Arlington.

“It was kind of breathtaking because I had never seen anything like that before,” Ahmed said. “I had lived in Texas all my life; I had seen tornadoes before. But it was still crazy because I had never seen [vehicles in the air]. It was definitely one of the worst tornadoes I had ever seen.”

The confirmed tornadoes touched down near Royce City and Silver Springs, said National Weather Service meteorologist Matt Bishop. A tornado watch remained in effect until 8 p.m. Most of Dallas was spared the full wrath of the storm.

Yet in Lancaster, television helicopters panned over exposed homes without roofs and flattened buildings. Broken sheets of plywood blanketed lawns and covered rooftops. American Airlines canceled more than 450 arriving and departing flights at its hub airport by late Tuesday afternoon, and 37 other incoming flights had been diverted to different airports.

DFW Airport spokesman David Magana said more than 110 planes were damaged by hail. It wasn’t clear how many belonged to American Airlines, but American and American Eagle had pulled 101 planes out of service for hail-damage inspections.

Flights also were canceled at Dallas Love Field, which is a big base for Southwest Airlines. That airline canceled more than 45 flights in and out of the airport by Tuesday evening.

TAN | Risk of sunburn greatest in afternoon

However, there are many ways to prevent melanoma and other types of skin cancer. One method is to avoid midday sun when the ultraviolet rays are at their strongest.

For most areas, this is between 10 a.m. and 4 p.m., according to the Environmental Protection Agency's SunWise Program. When outside, wearing sunscreen and protective clothing can help prevent sunburn. Using a high SPF sunscreen and applying sunscreen 20 to 30 minutes before exposure in the sun can also reduce the chances of sunburn.

Other methods to reduce risk of sunburn and skin cancer include wearing tight woven clothing, sunglasses and a baseball cap or visor while exposed to direct sunlight.

Lastly, avoiding tanning beds can also significantly reduce the risk of skin cancer. Tanning beds release radiation which highly increases risks of contracting skin cancer.

Becoming familiar with one's own skin can also decrease chances of skin cancer.

Anyone noticing anything unusual, such as raised or discolored moles, should consult a skin care specialist as soon as possible.

UVA, UVB protection important in sunlight

Monika Fallon
U. Virginia via UWIRE

With summer just around the corner and everyone anxious to jump into bathing suits and sundresses, a recent Mayo Clinic population-based study that found a rise in melanoma cases in young adults, especially in women, raises concerns.

"Melanoma, the most serious type of skin cancer, develops in the cells that produce melanin — the pigment that gives your skin its color," according to the Mayo Clinic website. The risk for melanoma increases with exposure to ultraviolet light from tanning beds and direct sunlight, as well as close family history of melanoma and exposure to certain chemicals or radiation.

From 1970 to 2009, patients between the ages of 18 and 39 were checked for "first-time diagnoses of melanoma." The study found a fourfold increase in young men and an eightfold increase in young women.

Researchers believed the rise in melanoma cases could be a result of the increased use of indoor tanning beds.

The important thing for young adults — especially college students — to remember about decreasing their risk for melanoma is that coverage is key, whether that involves clothing, a wide-brimmed hat or sunscreen.

PubMed Health, a website managed by the U.S. National Library of Medicine, said initial symptoms of melanoma can be a simple mole or sore on the skin, and can be diagnosed and removed quickly by a dermatologist if spotted early.

The website also provides the useful acronym ABCDE for self-diagnosis for people who are unsure about a recently-emerged skin abnormality.

A stands for asymmetry, simple enough to remember and even easier to check for: merely look at the mole or lesion and judge whether one side is significantly different from the other.

B stands for borders: if the growth has abnormal edges.

C stands for color: if the color changes within the growth or grows darker over time.

D stands for diameter: the growth is suspect if it is about 6 mm or larger.

E stands for evolution: if the mole continues to change appearance over a relatively short period of time.

Although the study showed an increase in cases of melanoma, it also showed a decrease in deaths caused by skin cancer, which is likely because of early detection methods.

More sunscreen companies are producing lotions which protect against both UVA and UVB sunlight as well, significantly decreasing the skin's exposure to the harmful rays.

Although identifying a case of melanoma early reduces chances of fatality, the only real way to prevent skin cancer is by taking measures to protect yourself from the harmful rays.

FILM | Group performed in Turkey, Korean DMZ

In 2005, Ron said the South Korean government asked the Yuval Ron Ensemble to perform in the demilitarized zone right on the border between North and South Korea. The ensemble has also performed in other countries, like Morocco and Turkey, which are still suffering from ethnic conflicts.

Ron said music is also a great tool that can help people overcome prejudice. While Armenians, for example, are forbidden to play Turkish music, one of his musicians, who is Armenian, plays it anyway, he said.

"People tend to come together around music," Ron said.

In the future, Ron said he wants to continue working in this direction and expand the reach of his music so he can influence a wider audience. He said he plans to collaborate with famous rock and pop music artists.

Ron's visit to K-State is a part of Creativity Illuminated, a series that focuses on presenting books, music and cultural activities in order to raise cultural awareness.

"I think it was very brave for them to make that movie [West Bank Story]," said Todd Holmberg, executive director of McCain Auditorium. "It makes light of Palestinian-Israeli conflict."

Darin Strouts, Manhattan resident, said he felt Ron did a good job of combining humor with the seriousness of his movies' content.

"It was hilarious. It was very deep, and also funny," Strouts said. "You have three kinds of music that combined. I think they highlighted the conflict in general. I don't have a lot of background of the conflict itself but I thought they explained it really well."
